P R E F A C E.

TOWARDS the middle of the year 1793, the subscriber published the first Edition of the Philadelphia Directory and Register; and from the very rapid sale which the work met with, he had the satisfaction of finding that he had been employed in a performance of general utility to his fellow citizens.

From the frequent removals, and the constant accession of new inhabitants, it is obvious, that the utility of such publications can be of no long duration; hence arises the necessity of their being frequently renewed.

In most European cities, and in the cities of New York and Charlestown, the Directory is published annually; and in conformity to this practice, it is the intention of the subscriber, in future to issue one towards the commencement of each succeeding year; provided he shall meet with sufficient encouragement.

In the present Edition, the account given of the City, and of its charitable and literary institutions, is considerably enlarged. Some things, which in the former Edition were deemed of less consequence, have been either abbreviated or omitted; and others of more general importance, substituted. A plan of the city has likewise been added, which he believes to be very accurate, and hopes it will be found useful, particularly to strangers.

Since the names were first collected, several, who have lately come to the city, have sent in their designations and places of abode. These, together with some which he has taken from the daily prints, and a few accidentally omitted in the arrangement, will be found in the Supplement.

On the whole, the subscriber, can with confidence assert, that through every part of the performance, he has anxiously endeavoured to render the information therein contained, as accurate as possible; he is, however, well aware, that in a publication of this nature, it is almost impossible intirely to avoid errors. For these, which he hopes are few, he solicits the indulgence of a generous public.

JAMES HARDIE.

GOLD COINS.

Half-Dollars, each to be of half the value of the dollar or unit, and to contain  $185 \frac{10}{16}$ ths grains of pure, or 208 grains standard silver.

Quarter-Dollars, each to be one fourth of the value of the dollar or unit, and to contain  $92 \frac{13}{16}$ ths grains of pure, or 104 grains of standard silver.

Dismes, each to be the value of one tenth of the dollar or unit, and to contain  $37 \frac{2}{16}$ ths grains of pure, or  $41 \frac{3}{8}$ ths grains of standard silver.

Half Dismes, each to be of the value of one twentieth of a dollar, and to contain  $18 \frac{3}{16}$ ths grains of pure, or  $20 \frac{4}{8}$ ths grains of standard silver.

By an act of January 14th, 1792, the weight of the cents and half-cents, is established as follows:

Cents, each of the value of the hundredth part of a dollar, to contain 208 grains, and half cents to contain 104 grains of copper.

A pound of pure gold is valued equal to fifteen pounds pure silver.—Gold coins are to consist of eleven parts pure gold, and one part alloy.

The standard of silver coins shall be 1485 parts fine, to 179 parts alloy.

Persons in possession of bullion may have it coined free of expence.

By an act of May 8th, 1792,—It is enacted, That the cents and half-cents, as they shall be coined, be paid into the treasury of the United States, thence to issue into circulation; and that after the expiration of six calendar months from the time when there shall have been paid into the treasury a sum not less than 50,000 dollars, in cents and half-cents, (of which notice shall be given in at least two news papers, published at the seat of government;) no other copper coins shall pass as current money, and every person paying, offering to pay, or receiving in payment, any other coin, excepting cents and half-cents, shall forfeit the said coin, and also the sum of ten dollars with costs of suit for the benefit of the person by whom information shall have been given.

Money of account of the United States shall be expressed in dollars or units, dimes or tenths, cents or hundredths, and mills or thousandths; a dime being the tenth of a dollar, a cent the hundredth, and a mill the thousandth. And all accounts in the public offices, and all proceedings in the courts of justice, shall be kept and had in conformity to this act.

A great number of cents have been already issued—some hundreds of dollars have also been coined, and from the most indubitable authority the editor can announce to the public, that a much greater quantity of gold and silver has been deposited for the purpose of coinage, than those who were best acquainted with the business at first expected.

INSURANCE COMPANY of NORTH AMERICA.

Office 119, So. Front St.

This respectable company began business in December 1792, and was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature, in April 1794. Its capital consists of sixty thousand shares, of ten dollars each, amounting to 600,000 dollars, payable by easy instalments, the whole of which, with the amount of premiums, is a security to the persons insured, in case of loss.

The operations of this company was at first confined to insurance on vessels and cargoes, and any valuable property gone or going by land or water; it is however now extended to different objects.

For the management of the company's affairs, the stockholder's annually choose fifteen directors, who elect a president out of their own number; and the remaining fourteen divide themselves into seven committees, who, with the president, sit in weekly rotation, at their office.

The directors declare dividends of their profits semi-annually.

The following Rules are to be observed in transacting business at the company's office, viz.

I. All orders for insurance must be given in writing, signed by the applicant; and as minute a description of the vessel is expected, as the person ordering the insurance can give, respecting her age, built, how found and fitted, and whether double or single decked.

II. All policies will be ready for delivery in twenty-four hours after the order for insurance is accepted at the office, and the policy must be taken up in ten days.

III. Notes, with an approved endorser, for all premiums, must be given in ten days, payable as follows, viz.

For American and West India risques, in three months after the date of the policy.

For European risques, in six months.

For China and East India risques, in twelve months.

For risques by the year, in eight months.

For risques for six months, in four months.

And, for risques for any lesser time, in three months.

IV. Losses will be paid in ten days after proof and adjustment; but if the note given from the premium shall not have become due within that time, the amount of it shall nevertheless be deducted from the loss to be paid.

The Directors, have likewise lately issued the following Table of Rates of Annual Premiums, to be paid for assurance against fire. The laying it before our readers, we trust will be acceptable.

No. I. Upon common insurances, or hazards of the first class, within the city of Philadelphia, and the Northern and Southern Liberties.

Brick or Stone houses, or Stores:

Furniture or Merchandize not hereafter specified as extra hazardous, contained in Brick or Stone Houses.

For sums not exceeding 8000 dollars at and after the rate of 30 cents for every hundred dollars.

For sums not exceeding 16000 dollars at and after the rate of 45 cents for every hundred dollars.

For sums not exceeding 25000 dollars at and after the rate of 60 cents for every hundred dollars.

N. B. As the neighbourhood of framed buildings, or other circumstances, may render a risque ineligible which is within the letter of these proposals, the company reserve a right to reject such an assurance at pleasure.

No. II.—Upon hazards of the second class.

Houses or Stores of which the walls are not wholly of Brick or Stone.

Furniture or merchandize, including extra hazardous Goods, as Pitch, tar, Turpentine, Wax, Hemp, Oil, Tallow, Spirituous Liquors, contained in houses or stores of which the walls are not wholly Brick or Stone.

These last recited extra hazardous articles in any building whatsoever.

A SHORT ACCOUNT

O F

THE CITY OF

THE city of Philadelphia, capital of the state of Pennsylvania, and seat of government of the United States of North America, lies in Lat.  $39^{\circ} 56$  North and Long.  $75^{\circ}$  West from the meridian of London, upon the Western bank of the river Delaware, which is here about a mile in breadth, and about one hundred and twenty miles from the Atlantic Ocean, by the course of the bay and river, and about fifty-five miles from the sea, in a South-Eastward direction. The Delaware is navigable from the sea to the falls of Trenton, about thirty miles above the city, by vessels of considerable burthen; and by boats of twenty and thirty tons, in the time of freshes, near two hundred miles into the state of New-York.

It was laid out by William Penn, the first proprietary and founder of the province, in the year 1683, and settled by a colony from England, which arrived in that and the preceding years, and it was increased by a constant and regular influx of foreigners to so great a degree, that in less than a century, and within the lifetime of the first person born within it of European parents, it was computed to contain 6,000 houses and 40,000 inhabitants.

The present number of houses is about 9,000, and there are at present building in the city and suburbs not less than 400.

The ground plot of the city is an oblong square, about one mile North and South, and two miles East and West, lying in the narrowest part of the isthmus between the Delaware and Schuylkill rivers, about five miles in a right line above their confluence. The plain is so nearly level, except upon the bank of the Delaware, that art and labour were necessary to dig common sewers and water courses in many places to drain the streets. In the beginning of this settlement it was expected that the fronts on both rivers would be first improved for the convenience of trade and navigation, and that the buildings would extend gradually in the rear of each until they should meet and form one town extending from East to West, but experience soon convinced the settlers that the Delaware front was alone sufficient for quays and landing places, and that the Schuylkill lay at too great a distance to form part of the town upon its banks; whence it followed that the town increased Northward and Southward of the original plot, upon the Delaware front, and now occupies a space near three miles in length, North and South, while the buildings in the middle where they are most extended do not reach a mile from the Delaware.

The city has been twice incorporated, and the limits thereof restrained to the oblong, originally laid out by William Penn without including the Northern or Southern suburbs. This plot is intersected by a number of streets at right angles with each other, nine of which run East and West from Delaware to Schuylkill, and twenty-three North and South crossing the first at right angles, forming one hundred and eighty-four squares of lots for buildings. The streets running East and West are named (except High street near the middle of the city) from the trees found in the country on the arrival of the colony: Vine, Sassafras, Mulberry High, Chesnut, Walnut, Spruce, Pine, and Cedar streets, and those running North and South from their numeral order, Front, Second, Third, Fourth &c. to Broad Street, which is midway between the two rivers. In deeds and other descriptive writings which require exactness, these streets have the Delaware or Schuylkill prefixed to their numeral names, to distinguish to which they belong; as Delaware Second Street, &c. but as there are very few buildings Westward of Broad Street this addition is never made in common conversation, but when they are named they are always understood to be Delaware front unless Scuykill is added.

Of these High Street is 100 feet, Broad Street 113, Mulberry 60, and all the others 50 feet wide. Within the improved parts of the city they are paved, in the middle with pebble stones for carts and carriages which usually contain three fifths of the whole breadth, and on each side with bricks for foot passengers. Between the brick and stone pavements are gutters paved with brick to carry off the water, and the foot-ways are defended from the approach of carriages, by rows of posts placed without the gutters, at the distance of 10 or 12 feet from each other.

Besides the forementioned main streets, there are many others not originally laid down in the plot; the most public of which are Water Street and Dock Street. Water Street is about 30 feet wide, running below the bank, at the distance of about 40 feet Eastward from the parallel to Front Street, extending from the North line of the city Southward, to the bridge over the dock, which was formerly a draw bridge, and retains that name in common use, altho' it was converted into a stone arch above thirty years since. From the bridge it is 40 feet wide in a right line to Pine Street, and leaves a row of houses without yards, on the bank, in its whole length, between it and Front Street.

Southward of Pine Street there is an offset of about 80 feet Eastward, and the street from thence to Cedar Street is 45 feet wide and called Penn Street. This street in the original plan was intended only for a cart way to accommodate the wharves and stores to be erected under the bank, and not to rise more than four feet above it, so as to leave the river open to the view from the West side of Front Street: but the inhabitants were soon convinced that the ground on both streets was too valuable to be kept unimproved, in any degree, merely for the sake of a prospect, and now it is close built with lofty houses (except a very few vacancies here and there) throughout the whole front on both sides, and commodious wharves are extended into the river, that the largest ships that use the port, can lie in safety to discharge and receive their cargoes, and are defended from the ice in the winter by the piers, made of logs, extending into the river, sunk with stone and filled with earth so as to be equally firm with the main land. This Street has been called in different parts King Street and Plumb Street, but those names are now disused, and the whole street is called Water Street, except that part called Penn Street between Pine & Cedar Streets.

Dock Street is the only crooked street in the city; beginning at the bridge in Front Street and extending North-Westward in a serpentine track, through two squares across Second and Walnut Streets, and terminating at Third Street. Another branch of it extends South-Westward across Spruce Street, and terminates at Second Street. The ground occupied by this Street and by an open space between it and Spruce Street, below the bridge was formerly a swamp, and was given by William Penn to the corporation for the use of the city. It was intended as a place to dig a basin and docks to shelter the shipping, but experience proved that ships could be defended from the ice by the piers extended into the river, and that the dock could not be kept clean but at an expence far beyond its utility, it was therefore neglected till it became a nuisance offensive to the smell and injurious to the health of the inhabitants and was by act of Assembly ordered to be arched over and covered with earth whereby the city has acquired a beautiful street more than 100 feet in breadth towards the water, and not less than 90 in the narrowest part.

The number of the streets, lanes and alleys, laid out by the owners of the lots before they were built on, is too great to be enumerated here, there being scarce a square that is not intersected by one or more of them, some of them continued in a right line through several squares and so spacious as to be easily mistaken for main streets, others only through one square.

This city was first incorporated by charter under the great seal of the province, in the year 1701: before which period it was called the town of Philadelphia. By this charter William Penn nominated the first mayor, recorder, aldermen and common councilmen, and granted them, amongst other privileges and franchises that of electing others to supply vacancies, and even to increase their own number at pleasure. The public grounds were granted to them by the name of the mayor and commonalty of the city of Philadelphia, but the commonalty had no share in the government or estate of the city, the whole body being self-elective, and not accountable to the citizens in any respect. It would be difficult to account for so extraordinary a charter from the wisdom of William Penn did not tradition inform us that among the first settlers were a considerable number from the city of Bristol in England, whose charter, granted at an early period before the rights of the commonalty were well understood, had been familiarized by habit, which induced them to request a similar one. A copy of the Bristol charter was accordingly procured, and with little variations adopted. It was not long however before the commonalty began to be dissatisfied with it, and to make frequent complaints to the assembly, of the abuses that were practised under it; many appear upon the minutes of the house. At an early period after the charter, the legislative powers of this corporation were very limited. They could not levy a shilling by taxes, for any use whatever, and could employ the income of the city estates only for the use and embellishment of the city, here we see few monuments raised to preserve the memory of that corporation. Although men highly distinguished for integrity and abilities were elected into the office of the body politic, yet such is the nature of unlimited power, not accountable to the people, that it will divert the best men from purposes, which before they were invested with that power, they would have highly approved. The jealousy which the citizens entertained of the corporation, pervaded the general assembly of the province, and when the lighting, watching and paving the city, became a desirable object, the representatives of the freemen would not entrust the corporation alone with the power of raising or expending the money necessary for these purposes. They could not however cast such a reflection on the respectable characters of which that body was composed, as wholly to vest these powers with others: they pursued a middle line, and constituted two separate bodies by the names of the city wardens and street commissioners, to the former of whom the lighting and watching, and to the latter the paving of the streets was committed. The mayor or recorder and four of the aldermen concurring with each body, in laying the taxes and prescribing the mode of expending them; and thus the city legislation for these purposes became compounded of two branches. The wardens and commissioners immediately elected by the people in the same manner as their representatives in assembly, constituted the democratic, and the mayor and aldermen the aristocratic branch. These bodies, thus compounded, conducted the business committed to them, with great harmony, nor is there the least recollection of any disagreement between them. The taxes were laid with equality, collected with moderation, and expended for the real use and improvement of the city. One complaint only, had foundation which arose from the nature rather than from any abuse of power; the number of wardens and street commissioners was so great, as at very moderate wages, to render those boards too expensive.

For the honour of the late corporation it ought not to be omitted, that the mayors court was always filled with an able lawyer for the recorder, and another for the prosecution of criminal offences; and such was the orderly and upright administration of justice in it, that no court in the province or perhaps in any other country exceeded it.

The prejudices under which the old corporation laboured from its original constitution, were so strong that upon the revolution, the general assembly declared by an act passed during their first session. "That the powers and jurisdiction hitherto exercised by the mayor, recorder and aldermen of the city of Philadelphia, were not founded on the authority of the people, and are therefore become null and void." Wherefore by that and several subsequent acts, the powers of the corporation were distributed between the supreme executive council, the city magistrates and the wardens and street commissioners, who exercised them from the year 1777, to 1789. The prejudices which had no foundation as against corporations in general, but only against the constitution of the late corporation of the city, were however so strong, that it was with difficulty the people could be prevailed on to submit to a new incorporation of the city. The defects in the administration of justice and governing the police of the city at length became so glaring, that they were seen by all classes of people, and their minds prepared for an act of incorporation. The general assembly in the winter sessions of 1789, favouring the wishes of the citizens, passed an act intitled an act to incorporate the city of Philadelphia, which with a supplement passed in 1790, constitutes the present city charter. By these acts

The magistracy consists of two branches: fifteen aldermen are chosen by the freeholders to continue in office for seven years; who chuse a recorder from the citizens at large for seven years, and a mayor from their own number for one year. Thirty common council men are chosen by the citizens at large, entitled to vote for representatives in assembly, to continue in office for three years; these were intended to form a balanced government upon the principle, that the choice by freeholders, and for a longer term would produce a more select body of aldermen, and that the citizens at large would choose characters fitter to represent and form the popular branch of city government. Eight aldermen and sixteen common council men form a quorum or board to transact business, at which the mayor or recorder presides; they sit and deliberate together, but no act is legal, unless, a majority of the aldermen, a majority of the common council men present, and the mayor or recorder concur.

That the gentlemen who have hitherto represented the citizens agreeably to this charter, have discharged their duty with credit to themselves and advantage to their constituents, is not disputed. Their impartial and expeditious administration of justice, and the very important improvements which have so rapidly taken place in Philadelphia, reflect upon them the highest honour; and indeed it may perhaps with safety be asserted, that under their direction, the police of the city has become equal, if not superior to that of any other on the continent. Some uneasiness has however, arisen in the breasts of many individuals, with respect to the mode of electing aldermen, which they represent, as being subversive of republican principles.—Every freeman say they has the privilege of voting for members of the common council, representatives in the Assembly and senate of the state and even for the governor and representatives in Congress; why then should the right of electing aldermen be vested in the free holders alone?

How far this reasoning may be just, it is not for us to determine. It may however, be added, that on this subject a petition was during the last session presented to the legislature; and there is no doubt, that when it shall finally be discussed, it will be decided in such a manner as to give general satisfaction.

A city court is held by the mayor, recorder and aldermen four times a year, and holds cognisance of all crimes and misdemeanors committed within the city.

A court of aldermen having cognisance of debts above forty shillings, and not exceeding twenty pounds, is held every week beginning on Monday morning, and setting by adjournments until the business of the week is finished.

Each alderman has separate cognisance of debts under forty shillings.

The number of inhabitants including the city and suburbs (including the district of Southwark and the compactly built part of the Northern Liberties, which to e-every purpose but as their governments, are considered as parts of the city) if found by the late census to be 42, 400, there was then about 7000 houses, stores and workshops. The number has now increased to about 9000 and there are at present about 400 building.—Hence if the number of inhabitants has increased in the same ratio as the houses, which is at least highly probable, the number of citizens may be estimated at about 55,000.

The buildings appropriated to public worship in the city and suburbs are in number 28, and are as follows viz.

Of the Baptist Church one, German Calvinist one, Protestant Episcopal Church three, Friends meeting houses five, of the German Lutherans two, Swedish Lutherans one, of the Hebrews one, of the Moravians one, of the Presbyterians of different denominations six, of the Roman Catholics three, and of the Universalists one.

There are also lately erected two buildings by the blacks; the one denominated the African Protestant Episcopal Church; in which the ministers of the Episcopal churches occasionally officiate. At other times the usual prayers & Liturgy are read by one of their elders. We are however informed that a young black, of very considerable abilities, who is now finishing his studies in the State of Maryland, will be soon ordained by the bishop of this state, and appointed to the care of that congregation.

The other is called The African Methodist Episcopal Church. It may not be improper to mention, that in four of these places of worship divine service is in the German language, viz. In the German Calvinist Church, in the two German Lutheran Churches, and in one of the Catholic Churches.

The city is provided with a number of public and private charitable institutions; the principal of which are The Pennsylvania Hospital, The house of Employment commonly called the Bettering house; The Friends Alms house; Christ Church Hospital and the dispensary. Of these we shall now proceed to give a short account.

PENNSYLVANIA HOSPITAL.

The design of this hospital was first suggested by the late Dr. Thomas Bond, for the purpose of relieving the sick poor, whether afflicted in body or mind.

As this benevolent plan was greatly approved of, many contributors appeared to support it.

In 1752, it was first established, it was not however till 1756 that any part of the present building was erected.

In 1773, they received about 12000*l.* from the unclaimed shares of the Pennsylvania Land Company in London. For this act of the British Parliament in their favour, they owe much to the unceasing labours of their great friends the late Dr. John Fothergill, Sylvanus Baven Jacob Hagen, and others.

The whole property belonging to the Hospital at present amounts to . . . . . £31,740—

Of the above mentioned sum the assembly gave of their constituents money about 5,500*l.* to reimburse the expence of the present building. The balance being 25,830*l.* are private legacies, grants and donations, the whole of which would lapse to the commonwealth if the contributors fail, an event which is at present little dreaded.

Besides the above sum the expence of the hospital poor has been paid by the contributors for these last forty years.

In addition to the 5,500*l.* given by the legislature to raise the eastern wing, they at their session in 1792 have granted a further sum of ten thousand pounds out of a loan office fund for the purpose of enlarging the hospital on its original plan, so as to admit a greater number of lunatics, and to obtain a due separation of them from the sick.

The last act allows a lying-in and foundling hospital to be united with this institution, whenever a fund is given to build and support the same.

The medical pupils pay for the privilege of attending the hospital practice and such pay is commonly understood to be a perquisite to the hospital physicians; this, however, they have generously given for the purpose of founding a medical library, and to purchase Dr. Chover's preparations; by the addition of which to Dr. Fothergill's valuable present, the institution without any expence to its funds, is possessed of the most useful and ornamental collection that was ever seen in America. The pay of those pupils exceeds 100*l.* per annum, which is amply sufficient to furnish the library with new books and to preserve the anatomical castings, &c.

A great number whose disorders are not proper for admission, have received medicine from the hospital dil-penfary, gratis, and the best advice from the physicians.

The managers are by charter prohibited from spending any part of their capital stock, the interest of which with such donations as are not expressly given thereto, is applied for the poor: and when as many paupers are first admitted as will absorb the said income, then if there is room, the managers may take other patients on pay, the profits of whose board also go to the poor. Of such patients they will always have a number until the said income, which is at present not half equal to the expences of the house, become sufficient to occupy it with the poor.

The price of pay patients is various, and sometimes changes. The overseers of the poor of Pennsylvania & all the societies therein, who support the poor by private and voluntary subscriptions, pay only 8s. 4d, including medicines, attendance, and all other charges, except cloathing.

The overseers of any other State pay 15s. and private persons from 10s. to 35s. as they and the managers can agree. These may choose their own physician, provided he is one of the hospital physicians, no others being admitted to practice in the house.

All the patients must submit to the orders of the physicians respecting their cases, and to the rules of the managers respecting their conduct, or be discharged. No amputation of a limb is allowed, without a consultation of physicians, and three at least must agree.

The instruments are the most complete of the kind, and preserved in excellent order for use; and every thing convenient for the patient is always provided.

A resident apothecary lives in the house; his duty is to receive and lend out books, to administer the prescriptions, and to summon the physicians on every urgent occasion; each of whom considers it as his duty immediately to attend. Two managers and physicians meet at the hospital every Fourth-day (Wednesday) and Seventh day (Saturday), at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, to receive and discharge patients, and much trouble is saved to those who apply at that time.

From the time the hospital was first erected to the month of May 1793, 8,608 patients had been admitted into the hospital, of which number 5,435 had been cured, 925 relieved, 412 removed at the request of their friends or sent to the house of employment, 119 found incurable, 525 discharged or eloped for irregular behaviour, 1140 died, & 53 then remain at the hospital.

From the 27th. of April 1793 to the 27th. of April 1794
93 poor & 208 pay patients have been admitted making in all 301, of whom have been discharged.

Remained April 27th. 1794—24 poor and 41 pay patients, 65 in all, of whom 35 are lunatics.

Overseers of the poor from the country, who bring a patient, are expected to produce a certificate signed by two magistrates, certifying that they are in office, and that the pauper resides in their district, without which the applicant is rejected.

Persons afflicted with incurable and infectious disorders are not admitted; but any person in Pennsylvania receiving by accident a desperate wound, or a fractured limb, may be brought to the hospital without an order provided he is brought immediately after the accident happens, and such persons, whether strangers or citizens, will be well taken care of at the contributors expense.

The name of the corporate body is, The contributors to the Pennsylvania Hospital.

A contributor must pay at least 10l. for which he receives a certificate from the treasurer; this he cannot transfer, nor can he receive any benefit from it, but the privilege of electing and being elected.

If he is chosen a manager, physician or treasurer, he must serve without fee or reward.

An institution founded on such humane and benevolent principles, embracing the poor of all descriptions, has done great honour to its founders, many of whose pious successors have been led by a secret impulse to endow it with occasional legacies and contributions, whereby the trust is enlarged, and a greater number of the sick are relieved: many of whom, for want of such an asylum, would suffer in solitary places, whilst the poor unhappy maniac, deprived of his senses would be roving about without knowing a home, at the risque of his life or the lives of the people.

THE ALMS HOUSE.

The Alms house and house of employment, is a large and commodious edifice. This institution commenced at an early period of the city, but the building now appropriated for that purpose, was not erected till the year 1766. The various objects to which this charitable institution extends, sufficiently indicate its great utility and the relief which it so liberally affords to the distressed of every description, reflects the highest honour on the citizens of Philadelphia.

Here the helpless stranger finds a comfortable residence, in the hour of sickness and distress; the blind in some measure forget the loss of sight, and the old & emaciated, who might otherwise find it difficult to procure a scanty subsistence, are enabled to pass the evening of life in tranquility and plenty. Here also, the unhappy woman, who, either from poverty or misconduct, may be destitute of the means of relief at that period when she stands most in need of it, is amply provided with every thing requisite for a safe delivery and an expeditious recovery. Of women of this description there are relieved at an average about thirty annually.

Nor is the humanity of this establishment confined to the mother. The same tender care is likewise extended to their helpless offspring, so that in this respect it may be considered both as a lying in and foundling hospital.

When any of the persons admitted into this house are found capable of contributing to their support by their own labour, they are daily employed for a certain reasonable number of hours in such a manner as may be most advantageous to the institution. The common work of the house is picking oakum, but taylor, shoemakers, weavers, &c. follow their respective occupations. Such women as are capable are employed in carding, spinning, knitting, sewing, &c. at the discretion of the managers.

To allure them to a chearful performance of the tasks allotted them, and to a regular and becoming conduct, certain small rewards are conferred on those who are most industrious and orderly: with respect to the refectory such fatherly and lenient measures are pursued as generally induce them to return to their duty without the necessity of a recourse to punishment, which, however, when it is inflicted, extends no farther than to privation from some of their usual meals, or to confinement to a dark room.

By these wise and salutary measures the utmost regularity and good order is preserved, a harmony prevails which could not well be expected among people of so many various descriptions.

The cleanliness and neatness observed not only in the rooms, but also with respect to the cloathing of individuals, attract the notice of all travellers, who unanimously declare that in this respect, this institution far exceeds any establishment of the kind in the old world; and it may at least, be safely asserted that it is not surpassed by any in the new.

The number of paupers is different at different seasons. The average is however, about 350. But the charity extensive as it is, is not solely confined to those within the pale of the house, a number of necessitous persons without likewise, meet with occasional assistance in the hour of calamity.

Many of our readers would no doubt, wish to learn the kind and quantity of provisions by which these people are supported. In this particular, we can not better inform them than by laying before them the Stewart's account during the last week ending November 2d. 1794 is all follows.

lbs. of beef,	931	lbs. of rice,	232
bush. indian meal	270	bush. cocoa nut shells	3
galls. molasses,	28	lbs. of flour,	1834
do. of milk,	105	bush. of potatoes,	14
bush. of turnips,	5	lbs. of tea,	28
lbs. of sugar,	146	bush. of corn.	10

We need not observe that here is not only abundance of the necessaries but also of the comforts and even luxuries of life.

To defray this expence, the profits arising from their manufactures is by no means adequate. Indeed when it is considered that by far the greater number intirely incapable of labour, there will obviously be a vast deficiency. The overseers and guardians of the poor who have also the superintendence of this institution are by act of Assembly vested with power to lay taxes for its support; and surely no good citizen will ever hesitate to contribute his quota to the maintenance of an institution, which cloathes the naked, feeds the hungry, takes in the stranger, relieves the sick and which so eminently redounds to the honour of the metropolis of America.

FRIEND'S ALMS HOUSE.

Is situated in Walnut St. on the South side, between Third and Fourth Sts.

The Friends' alms house is supported by that society for the use of their own poor. It is divided into a number of separate houses and rooms for families or single persons who have fallen into decay, most of whom by their industry contribute to their own support, but are supplied with whatever necessaries their industry falls short of procuring; by a committee of the society; and thus live more comfortably than many, who, in full health and unhurt by accident provide for their own subsistence.

CHRIST CHURCH HOSPITAL.

Is situated in Mulberry St.

Is an endowment for aged women of the Protestant Episcopal church, made by Dr. John Kearsly, formerly an eminent physician in this city; who bequeathed for this purpose, an estate chiefly landed, which he vested in the rector, church wardens and vestrymen of the united Episcopal churches of Christ church and St. Peter's.

Since the endowment of this institution, it has received a considerable accession of property, by the gift of Mr. Joseph Dobbins, a native of this city now residing in Carolina; subject to an annuity during Mr. Dobbins's life.

Dr. Kearsly's will requires, that the women belonging to this institution shall be supplied with meat, drink and lodging; with necessary assistance in physic & surgery.—There are now 19 on the foundation.

THE SOCIETY FOR ALLEVIATING THE MISERIES OF PUBLIC PRISONS.

Was instituted in the month of May 1787. The object of the institution may be known from the duties of the acting committee, as laid down in the 7th. article of the constitution as follows.

“ The acting committee shall visit the public prisons, or such other places of confinement of punishment as are ordained by the law, at least once every week. They shall enquire into the circumstances of every person confined; they shall report such abuses as they shall discover, to the officers of government, who are authorised to redress them; and shall examine the influence of confinement or imprisonment upon the morals of the persons who are the subjects of them.

The benefits resulting from this society may be comprehended under the following heads, viz.

I. Relief in money and provision, afforded to suffering prisoners; which the society's committee have been enabled to accomplish, to a considerable extent; partly by means of the annual contributions of the members, and partly by directing the distribution of what is occasionally given in money and victuals. Under this head may be reckoned the sometimes paying of small fees, when the case seemed to deserve it, and when the party would otherwise have been detained for them in confinement.

II. Applications to the magistracy for the enlargement of persons illegally confined, which has sometimes happened from the obscurity and friendless conditions of the parties.

III. Complaints successfully made to the proper officers of offences against law, in the management of the jail, especially the sale of spirituous liquors, occasioning the corruption of young offenders, and the hardening of the old.

IV. Legislative improvements of the penal law, in a great measure is owing to the solicitations of the society.

Since the legislature's giving their attention to the making such improvements, and especially since the appointment of a board of inspectors with legal powers, composed of members of this society, it was thought expedient to alter the constitution, limiting the meetings at once a year; at which time a committee is chosen, who meet in the interval to transact all necessary business.

As the society's exertions have confessedly had a con-considerable effect in procuring the present improved state of the public prisons, it may be proper to mention the evidences of improvements in the prohibition of spirituous liquors, the separation of the sexes, and cleanliness of the apartments, and the employing of the prisoners in useful labour. In regard to the last article it is worthy of the public notice; that some of the prisoners on the expiration of their terms, have received a balance due to them from their labours, after deducting for their maintenance. The punishment of refractory criminals is the secluding them from society, in cells, elevated above the ground and not having a ground floor; but without loading them with irons.

To aid the influence of these regulations, the clergy of different religious denominations occasionally attend for the purpose of public prayer and preaching.

To the benevolent mind, the great and important improvements which have lately taken place in our penal codes in the state of Pennsylvania, must afford the highest satisfaction. By a law passed in the year 1786, the following were declared to be the only capital crimes, viz. murder, rape, treason and arson. All corporal punishments for smaller offences were abolished, as experience had sufficiently evinced that no great hopes of reformation could be rationally entertained from him who had once been disgraced with the discipline of the cat, or any such infamous punishments. The humane must be much gratified by the salutary effects which this act produced.—The number of the criminals were so far from being multiplied that they greatly decreased and many who according to the laws of any other countries, would have been cut off as being unworthy of existence amongst mankind, have been reclaimed from vice and become useful members of society.

The limits of our plan will not admit of being more particular on this head. The humane will be pleased to learn where they can receive more extensive information.

At the last session of the legislature the penal code was again amended. The preamble to the act declares that the design of punishment is to prevent the commission of crimes and to repair the injury that hath been done thereby to society or the individual. And that it hath been found by experience that these objects are better obtained by moderate and certain penalties, than by severe and excessive punishments, and that as it is the duty of every government to endeavour to reform rather than exterminate offenders, the punishment of death ought never to be inflicted where it is not absolutely necessary ; therefore that punishment is abolished in all cases except for murder of the first degree.

Murder which may be perpetrated by means of poison, by lying in wait, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate and premeditated killing, which shall be committed, in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery or burglary is declared to be murder of the first degree. For all other crimes hard labour and confinement are the means used to reform offenders.

We shall just add that amongst the humane of every nation, it has long been a matter of concern that the rigour of punishment was seldom in proportion to the guilt of the offender ; thus a petty scoundrel is often condemned to the gallows for a theft, a forgery of a few pounds, whereas a more cunning rascal, after a few months or perhaps weeks confinement, is set at liberty with vast property, which he has swindled from thousands and again commences his devastations on society.

In Pennsylvania things of this sort can no longer happen : life can only be forfeited for life ; and it is probable that the time is not far distant, when mankind becoming more humane, will even in this case, not dare to deprive a fellow creature of that which God alone can give.

THE HUMANE SOCIETY.

Was instituted in the year 1780, for the purpose of recovering persons supposed to be dead from drowning ; and considerable benefit occurred from their laudable exertions. But either from the objects being too confined, or from the difficulty of convening the members, (all of whom were to attend the meeting) or from the late war, the operations of the society were for a long time suspended ; until the year 1787, when a number of the members again met, and concluded, that the business would be best conducted by twelve managers, chosen annually by the contributors, and that it would be of great importance to extend their objects, not only for the original purpose of endeavouring to restore to life those who were supposed dead from drowning : but also such as were in the same condition from many other circumstances; such as exposure to heat or cold, drinking cold water, damps, lightning, suffocation from charcoal. &c. It was accordingly agreed to embrace all these objects. The managers have therefore not only published proper rules to be observed in these cases, but have also placed the necessary apparatus in different parts near the river, and give premiums to such persons as have been instrumental in saving the lives of their fellow creatures exposed to accidents of this kind.

It is sincerely to be wished that, in imitation of the humane society in Boston, they may be enabled to provide for the relief of shipwrecked seamen. The present funds arise, out of a contribution of one dollar annually from each of the subscribers.

FIRST-DAY OR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

“The society for the institution and support of First-day or Sunday schools in the city of Philadelphia and the districts of Southwark and the Northern Liberties,” was instituted early in the year 1791. The members then formed a constitution for their government, by which the society is to meet every three months in every year. The affairs of the institution in the recess of the society are conducted by twelve of its members who are called Visitors, three of whom form a board to do business, who meet monthly, have the charge of the schools and expenditure of money, &c.

The society is formed of all those persons who subscribe the constitution, and pay to the treasurer at the time of subscribing and annually afterwards one dollar; but ten dollars in one payment constitutes a member during life, which subscriptions form a fund to defray the expences of the institution.

Three schools were opened in March 1791, since which upwards of 1000 scholars have been admitted, and have partaken of its advantages; and there are at this time more than 300 on the list of attendance.

One of these schools for girls is under the care of John Ely, in the rear of Mulberry St. meeting: the two others for boys, one of which is under the care of John Poor in Cherry St. The other under Thaddæus Brown, in Front near Almond Street.

It is a particular rule with the society, that the scholars come clean to the schools, and attend the places of worship to which they respectively belong.

By this benevolent institution the children of many of the poorer part of the community who would otherwise have been running through the streets habituating themselves to mischief, are rescued from vice and innured to habits of virtue and religion: and it is with great pleasure that the board of Visitors have observed that the improvement in reading and writing made by the children of these schools answers their most sanguine expectations.

The ABOLITION SOCIETY.

Incorporated by charter.

The society for promoting the abolition of slavery, and the relief of free negroes unlawfully held in bondage, was first instituted in the year 1774, and afterwards enlarged both in its objects and members on the 23d. of April 1787. The zeal and activity of this society have been crowned with uncommon success, and has given rise to many similar societies in the other states: and has also been instrumental in suggesting to the legislature most of those improvements in the laws which relate to the compleat abolition of slavery, which have been enacted since the memorable law of March 1st, 1780, which first laid the axe to the root of this abominable evil.

The preamble to this act sets forth, "That whereas " the condition of those persons, who have heretofore
 " been denominated negro and mulatto slaves, has been " attended with circumstances which not only deprived
 " them of common blessings to which they were entitled
 " by nature, but has cast them into the deepest afflictions
 " by an unnatural separation and sale of husband " and wife from each other, and from their children:
 " an injury the greatness of which can only be conceived
 " by supposing that we were in the same unhappy case."
 In justice, therefore, to persons so unhappily circumstanced, &c. it is enacted, That all persons as well negroes and mulattoes and others who shall be born within this state from and after the passing of this act, shall not be considered as servants for life, or slaves; and that all servitude for life, or slavery of children in consequence of the slavery of their mothers, in the case of all children born within this state, from and after the passing the act aforesaid, shall be, and hereby is utterly taken away, extinguished, and abolished for ever.

And it is farther enacted, That all such persons as before the passing of the act, would have been slaves for life, shall only be subjected to servitude till they shall have attained the age of twenty eight years: in the same manner and conditions, whereon servants bound by indenture for four years, are or may be retained or holden.

This society has also been the happy means of procuring the emancipation of several thousand blacks, who were detained in bondage contrary to the laws of the state, and have even in many instances by legal process and otherwise, procured the restitution of those who had been villainously kidnapped from several parts of the United States, and sent to the West Indies.

From a very extensive and regular correspondence, kept up between this society and those founded on similar principles, not only in America, but also in Europe, the friends to this oppressed race of men are daily encreasing:—the French convention have declared liberty to all men without exception. Long debates have taken place on the subject in the British parliament, and the friends of humanity may exult in the prospect, that the period is not far distant, when mankind will wonder that their forefathers should ever have tolerated an enormity of so great a magnitude, as the slavery of their fellow creatures.

The stated meetings of the society are on the first Mondays of January, April, July, and October. These meetings are generally large, and composed of persons of all the different religious sects in this city. The business is conducted with great order and harmony. The great Dr. Franklin was president of this society for several years before his death, and took great pleasure in discharging all the duties of that station. Each member pays 10s. a year towards the expences of the society. This money is employed chiefly in defraying the cost and other charges which are incurred by the emancipation of negroes unlawfully held in bondage. The society consists of resident and corresponding members.

OF MUTUAL-BENEFIT SOCIETIES.

There are a number of societies instituted within these few years, which are here called Mutual Benefit:—The object of these institutions, is no doubt, highly laudable. The members contribute some small sum at entrance, and a certain additional trifle either monthly or quarterly. Hence, without the smallest difficulty to the individuals composing the societies, a fund is raised which is appropriated to the sole purpose of assisting each other in sickness; and of making a provision for the widows and orphans of the deceased, and thus, like the society of Friends, they support each other.

OF NATIONAL SOCIETIES.

The propriety of these institutions is obvious. When people fall into misfortunes in any part of the world, remote from the place of their nativity, it is natural for them to make their distress first known to those who were originally from the same country. The presumption is, that the love of the native soil, which is inseparable from every human breast, will make their countrymen more ready than others, to administer to their relief: and that possibly some may be found among them, with whom they are connected by blood, who may have known some of their relatives, or, at least who may have better opportunities of being assured from local circumstances, that they are not impostors. No greater proof can be given of the utility of these institutions, than that many have been relieved by their charity, who must otherwise have considerably suffered in a place wherein they were strangers.—The national societies in this city are, the St. Andrews, the German incorporated, the St. George's, and the Hibernian.

To these we may add, a society which has been lately established; which, when we consider the vast emigrations, which, from the present convulsed state of Europe, are likely to happen, there is every reason to believe will be found of the greatest utility:—this is

The SOCIETY for the INFORMATION and ASSISTANCE of EMIGRANTS.

To those in affluent circumstances, the members of this society can only offer their friendship as individuals, congratulate them on their safe arrival, and wish them success and happiness.

To those in middling circumstances, who may wish for information, the society refers to its committee, which will always be ready to shew them every possible attention.

But, to the sick, the friendless, and the needy, the society addresses itself in a peculiar manner; requests them not to suffer their spirits to droop, and assures them, that upon application to any of their committees, their cases will be taken under immediate consideration.

Each member of this society upon admission, pays the sum of one dollar, and the further sum of one dollar annually. We are likewise informed, that several public spirited individuals, have subscribed considerable sums for the benefit of the society; and without doubt, the wealthy and liberal minded citizens of Philadelphia, will readily join in support of an institution, which, whilst it is remarkably calculated to assist the distressed, may likewise be highly beneficial to the infant manufactures of America.

HEALTH OFFICE.

Among the many institutions of which Philadelphia has to boast, that are calculated for the preservation and well-being of the citizens, that of a Health Office is among the first. This has been for many years established by law; and, until the last year, was deemed fully requisite for every purpose intended to be executed by such institutions. The melancholy scene, however, which was acted in the city during the last autumn, in consequence of the prevalence of an epidemic, resembling in many of its symptoms, the well known yellow fever of the West Indies; from which it was by many supposed to have been imported,* have induced the legislature to alter and considerably amend the laws for guarding the city from the introduction of contagious diseases, which were before very defective.

They have accordingly, at their last session, passed a law, ordering the public hospital, or pest house, (as it has hitherto been called) situated upon State Island, five miles below the city, on the river Delaware, to be put in complete repair for the accommodation of the patients that may be admitted; and a resident physician, consulting physician, and health officer, to be appointed by the Governor, the former of whom is to live constantly at the hospital or health office, (as it is now called) in a house to be erected for the purpose; and the latter are to live in the city, but occasionally to assist in the business of the institution. Every vessel that arrives (coasters from this state excepted) is ordered to be anchored opposite to the health office, in the stream of the Delaware, until she is visited by the resident physician; who examines every part of the vessel and makes every necessary enquiry into the state of the crews health; that of the port or place from which the vessel comes; the number of sick or deaths during the voyage; the state of the cargo, whether infected or not, &c. And if he sees no cause of detaining the vessel from the presence of sickness, or the cargo being infected with any contagious disease, (the small-pox or measles excepted) he is to give a bill of health, certifying the same to the captain, who delivers it to the health officer in the city; but should he find any sick on board, or apprehends danger from suffering the vessel to proceed to the city, he removes such sick to the hospital, and there attends them; and also detains the vessel until he thinks it safe for her to proceed, and has taken such measures to purify her, and the cargo supposed to be infected, as he thinks proper.

**The physicians, and those too of the first standing in their profession, contended for the origination of the late fever in the city, from a quantity of putrid coffee landed upon one of the wharves, where it was permitted to be exposed to the action of the open air and sun, for some weeks, aided by the effects of a very warm and dry summer. This opinion was first stated by Dr. Rush, and as fully defended in his elaborate treatise on the late epidemic, just published.*

No vessel is suffered to come nearer the city, than the health office, nor no person or goods suffered to be landed in any port or place within the Delaware, with a view of being conveyed into the state, before the examination of the resident physician, under very heavy penalties upon the pilot and master of the vessel, and person offending, and also upon any attempts to conceal sickness.

The duty of the consulting physician is to assist the resident physician, in the attendance of the sick landed at the hospital; to visit any vessels detained by the resident physician, on account of sickness or infection on board; to remand any vessel back to the health office after her arrival at the city, in case of any discovery of sickness, and to superintend with the resident physician the smoking or purifying any goods supposed to be infected, and landed at the health office.

The health officer is to keep his office open every day, for the reception of the bills of health granted by the resident physician, to captains of vessels; to attend at the health office on State Island, when requested by the resident physician; and with the consulting physician, to visit such vessels as may be detained or put in quarantine; as also to assist in the smoking and purifying infected goods.

Twenty-four inspectors of the health office, are to be annually appointed by the mayor and corporation of the city; and six justices of the Northern and Southern Liberties, out of the city and county, who are to divide themselves into four classes, each consisting of six inspectors, who are to serve monthly, and are vested with all the powers of the health office; to regulate the management of the health office, and the conduct of the steward, matron, nurses, and other officers appointed by them: and are to make a report, with the resident physician, every month to the Governor,—of the number and diseases of the patients admitted into the hospital. They are likewise to have the care of the health of the city, and do every thing that may tend to the preservation of so invaluable a blessing. A new hospital is likewise to be erected over the river Schuylkill, to be under their direction; for the purpose of removing all persons thereto, who may be hereafter affected with any contagious disease in the city.

This is a short abstract of a very lengthy and excellent law, as far as it goes, for the regulation of the health office; but it is yet imperfect in several particulars, which will, no doubt, be amended at the next session of the legislature: the most beneficial consequences have however resulted from it.

The law took place the beginning of last May, and is now in an active state of operation; and it is, no doubt, owing to it, that the city enjoys its present uncommon healthiness.

When mentioning the regulations adopted by the legislature for the purpose of preventing infectious disorders, it may not be improper to observe that the city within a few years past, has experienced a very remarkable revolution, in respect to the health of its inhabitants. The bill of mortality in every year (excepting the year 1793, when the yellow fever spread depopulation amongst us) proves that the number of deaths has considerably decreased during the last ten years, notwithstanding the great increase of population.

This change in favour of life is ascribed by the physicians to the cooperation of the following causes,

- I. The arching of the docks, whereby a very noxious and offensive nuisance was removed.
- II. The cultivation of the lots adjoining and partly surrounding the city, whereby another extensive source of putrid exhalations is dried up.

III. An increased care in cleaning the streets.

IV. An increase of horticulture, and consequently of vegetable aliments.

V. The institution of the dispensary, which has extended medical aid to many hundreds in a year, who either perished for the want of it, or were sacrificed by quacks.

VI. The more improved state of physic, whence several diseases formerly fatal are in most instances better understood and therefore more generally cured: and,

VII. From a general diffusion of knowledge among all classes of people, from our libraries, our numerous societies and daily publications; whence the people at large are better acquainted than formerly with the means of preserving their health.

It is with pleasure we give this information from the best authority, and it is to be hoped that the same or other proximate causes will continue this valuable blessing—an increase of health to the inhabitants of Philadelphia.

OF THE YELLOW FEVER.

Having mentioned this disorder to have occasioned great devastation in the year 1793, a short account of it may be acceptable to several of our readers, who, perhaps, have not had an opportunity of perusing the volumes which have been written on the subject.

This disorder made its first appearance towards the latter end of July, in a lodging house in North Water Street: and for a few weeks seemed entirely confined to that vicinity. Hence it was generally supposed to have been imported and not generated in the city. This was the opinion of Doctors Currie, Cathrall and many others. It was however combated by Dr. Benjamin Rush, who asserts that the contagion was generated from the stench of a cargo of damaged coffee, which had been landed near the same place, where it first made its appearance, on a supposition that vegetable putrefaction might produce such a disorder. For this opinion he has given his reasons at large, in a volume of which he is now publishing the second edition.

At the most eminent physicians have differed on this subject, we shall not offend by hazarding an opinion.

To those who wish for particelar information we refer to their respective writings.

But from whatever fountain we trace this poisoned stream, it has destroyed the lives of many thousands—and many of those of the most distinguished worth. Its characteristic or leading symptoms, were sudden debility in the voluntary powers, oppressive pain, giddiness, sense of fullness and distention in the vessels of the fore part of the head and an oppressive weight about the heart and lungs, accompanied with great anguish, and restlessness. During the month of August the funerals amounted to upwards of three hundred. The disease had then reached the central streets of the city and began to spread on all sides with the greatest rapidity. In September its malignance increased amazingly. Fear pervaded the stoutest heart: flight became general, and terror was depicted on every countenance. In this month 1400 more were added to the list of mortality. The contagion was still progressive and towards the end of the month 90 & 100 died daily. Until the middle of October the mighty destroyer went on with increasing havoc. From the 1st. to the 17th. upwards of 1400 fell as victims to the tremendous malady. From the 17th. to the 30th the mortality gradually decreased. In the whole month, however, the dead amounted to upwards of 2000—a dreadful number, if we consider that at this time near one half of the inhabitants had fled. Before the disorder became so terrible, the appearance of Philadelphia must to a stranger have seemed very extraordinary. The garlic, which many chewed as a preventative could be smelled at several yards distance, whilst other hoped to avoid infection by a recourse to smelling bottles, handkerchiefs dipped in vinegar, camphor bags, &c. so that few individuals could be seen in the streets without one or other of these applied to his nostrils.

At last, however, experience had proved that these were inefficacious. A reliance on divine providence succeeded, and in the most terrible stage of the disorder the citizens discovered the most decent fortitude and the greatest resignation. These imaginary preventatives were therefore thrown aside.

From the 1st. to the 7th. of November, the mortality gradually decreased. On the 9th, the burials which had hitherto been so exceedingly numerous were reduced to six. The fugitive citizens now began to return, and the streets resumed their wanted life and activity.

During this awful calamity, as has been already observed, terror and dismay generally pervaded the citizens. Some were found, however, who at the risk of their own lives, were highly instrumental in saving the lives of their fellow creatures. An hospital was erected at Bushill at the distance of about one mile from the inhabited part of the city. Thither the infected were sent in great numbers, but from a want of cleanliness and good order, the hospital and the grave were nearly the same thing.

A committee had been appointed to assist the guardians of the poor in the legal discharge of their duty. It was one of the first objects of their care to remedy this evil. To search into the horrors of this dismal receptacle required the fortitude of a Howard. Men, however, stepped forth, and voluntarily undertook the arduous task. Stephen Girard, a native of France, a wealthy merchant of this city, and Peter Helm, a native of Philadelphia, both members of the committee offered their assistance. Thanks to Heaven! their invaluable lives were preserved and their generous labours crowned with success. The poor now no longer considered Bushill as the anti chamber of the grave; but as a humane provision for the necessitous and sick: and now many recovered.

So great a mortality of course left a great number of orphans in very destitute circumstances. Here again was a large field of labour opened for the benevolent. The children were to be provided with nurses, provisions and other accommodations. The committee, however, to their former burthens undertook this, and procured the Logonian library, which was fitted up as an orphan house, where about two hundred children were admitted, 60 of whom were infants.

The accumulating expences of this institution, with that of Bushill and many others, obviously required considerable sums of money. Liberal contributions were sent from different quarters amounting in the whole to 29,085 dollars.

During this melancholy period the city lost ten of her most valuable physicians, and most of the others were sick at different times. The number of deaths in all, amounted to 4041. To those who wish for particular information on this subject, we would recommend Carey's account of the yellow fever.

From a perusal of the foregoing pages, the impartial reader will be satisfied that in the city of Philadelphia, the means of relief are amply provided for the afflicted of every description. It will also appear from what follows, that literary institutions are not wanting. These may be divided, 1st. into the University and other scholastic establishments. 2d. Public libraries. 3d. Scientific societies, and 4th, the Museum.

UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA.

The history of this Seminary necessarily involves in it the history of two other seminaries; now generally distinguished by the names of the Old College and the old University.

The Old College consisted of three parts; the charitable schools, the academy, and the college, strictly so called. The Charitable schools, which were two in number were intended; the one for the reception of thirty girls, to be taught reading, writing and sewing; the other for the reception of sixty boys, who were to be instructed in reading, writing and arithmetic. The Academy comprehended three schools; an English school, a school for arithmetic and the practical branches of the mathematics, and a Latin and Greek school. The College was divided into two schools; one, for teaching the philosophy of the body, (i. e. physics or natural philosophy) in conjunction with the higher branches of the mathematics; another, for the philosophy of the mind or spirit, (i. e. natural theology, psychology or the philosophy of the human mind moral philosophy, and logic,) in conjunction with the higher classics.

These several parts were not all instituted at the same time. The Charitable Schools and Academy were opened in the year 1750; under the direction of a board of trustees, consisting of twenty four members, who however were not incorporated until the year 1753. These being well conducted and continuing to flourish, the trustees were encouraged to extend their designs still further; and, in 1754, opened the philosophical schools. And as this addition to the plan rendered the charter which had been already granted them inadequate, they solicited, and in the following year obtained, a new one; which put all the several parts abovementioned under the same direction, and gave to the whole the style of 'The College, Academy and Charitable Schools of the city of Philadelphia in Pennsylvania.'

After this, in the year 1765, were added the medical schools: consisting of four professorships: one of the theory and practice of physic; another of anatomy; another of botany and materia medica; and another of chemistry.

Such was the origin of this institution. Though intended for the benefit of the public in general, and though it could not be carried on but at a very considerable expence, it was altogether the work of a few private citizens of Philadelphia; but among these was Dr. Franklin; by whom the design was originally projected, and the proposals for carrying it into execution drawn up and published.

Soon after the revolution, however, in the year 1779 there passed an act of the legislature entitled, "An act to confirm the estates and interests of the College, Academy and Charitable Schools of the city of Philadelphia: and to amend and alter the charter thereof, conformably to the revolution, and to the constitution and government of this commonwealth; and to erect the same into an university."

By virtue of this act the Seminary was placed under the direction of a new board of trustees, a few of whom had been members of the old board; the style of it was changed from that of The College, Academy and Charitable schools, &c. to that of The University of the state of Pennsylvania: and the executive council authorized to set apart, for its use, so many of the confiscated estates as would produce an additional income of fifteen hundred pounds a year.

But the trustees of the old college and their Provost, petitioning, that their charter, and the property which they had formerly held, might be restored to them; and the legislature in the year 1789, thinking fit to comply; there began at length to exist, what in the beginning had not been contemplated, two distinct seminaries: The University of the state of Pennsylvania, and, at the same time The College, Academy and charitable schools of the city of Philadelphia.

Neither of these seminaries, however, being possessed of funds sufficient to defray the expence of conducting it; and it not being likely that the legislature would be prevailed on to grant the money of their constituents, for the farther endowment of two seminaries of general learning in the same city, where, confessedly, but one of them was wanting; each party became still more and more convinced of the necessity of an union. Conferences for this purpose began to be held. And in the end it was mutually agreed, that the two boards, should each of them, prefer to the legislature a similar petition; praying, that, on certain conditions to be therein specified, both seminaries should be consolidated into one. These conditions were, that each board should select twelve of its members to constitute a new board; of which the governor of the state for the time being should be president: and that, whatever might be the number of professors which this new board should think fit to establish, such professors should be chosen equally out of the two faculties, belonging, the one to the old college, and the other to the old university; unless the number to be thus established should be an odd number: in which case the odd number, should be taken from either of the faculties indiscriminately.

These petitions were presented; the legislature approved of the proposal; and accordingly, in the year 1791, an act was passed, entitled, "An Act to unite the University of the state of Pennsylvania, and the College, Academy, and Charitable schools of Philadelphia, in the commonwealth of Pennsylvania."

And thus was, in the end, erected the seminary, now called, The University of Pennsylvania; still consisting of the same schools of which the old college consisted.*

EPISCOPAL ACADEMY.

The academy of the protestant Episcopal church was instituted on the first day of January 1785 ; a subscription having been opened for the purpose in the end of the preceding year. The fundamental laws of the institution were enacted on the said day, at a general meeting of the subscribers, and are still its constitution, being recognised and confirmed in the act of incorporation granted by the legislature, about two years after the establishment of the seminary.

* The trustees at a late meeting, elected the celebrated Dr. PRIESTLY to fill the chemical chair. From the well known abilities of that gentleman, it is to be wished that he will accept of the appointment.

This Institution, besides the free schools, had three others; one, for the Latin and Greek languages; another, for arithmetic and the practical mathematics; and the third, for the English language. These have been for some time suspended; and the only schools now open are the free schools; consisting of about 80 boys and 40 girls: but the trustees have lately, by advertisement, signified their intention of re-opening the other schools, as soon as a satisfactory master can be procured.

OF THE AFRICAN SCHOOLS.

WHILE the society of Friends, and the abolition society have been exerting themselves, with success, to ameliorate the situation of the unfortunate Africans, they have also extended their benevolence to their children, for whose education they have made ample provision. About the year 1770, a school was instituted by private subscription of the Friends, with a view to prepare that degraded race for a better situation in civil life: but by the will of Anthony Benezet, of benevolent memory, a considerable donation from the society of Friends in England, and some other charitable devices have provided funds nearly adequate to its future support; so that in a short time it will no longer be burthensome to individuals.

The school is kept in Willing's alley. The boys are taught by Daniel Britt, and the girls by his wife. The school is visited once a month by a committee appointed by the three monthly meetings of Philadelphia: and it is pleasing to observe that the progress of the pupils has hitherto answered the most sanguine expectation of its humane institutors.

There is also a school for the blacks supported by the abolition society, in Cherry St. kept by Helena Harris, a black woman of considerable parts, who had been for several years employed as a teacher of white children in England.

OF PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

Fifth, between Chesnut and Walnut Streets.

THE foundation of the present library was laid in the year 1731, a period when Philadelphia afforded little assistance to the enquiries of the studious. A number of gentlemen having raised the sum of one hundred pounds by subscription, a small library was formed upon principles the best calculated to disseminate knowledge: the books were not, as in many of the public libraries of Europe, confined to the apartments, but the subscribers were allowed to carry them home for a reasonable space of time.

The plan soon became popular; accessions to the number of members took place, and the stock of books was annually encreased by purchases at the Company's expence, and liberal donations from persons both at home and abroad.

The then proprietaries of Pennsylvania appear to have taken a patriotic pleasure in the encouragement of the plan. Besides several valuable donations, they granted a charter of incorporation in the year 1742.

A spirit of literary improvement made its way among all classes of people, and the philanthropy of the great and amiable character * who suggested the plan, was gratified by tracing the books as well into the hands of the opulent, with whom literature is sometimes no more than one of the ornaments of civil life, as among those to whom it renders a more substantial benefit. Letters, while they employ the leisure of the artist, reconcile him to his labour; by removing grosser relaxations they promote his health, while they enlarge his mind; and prolong his life, while they teach him to enjoy it.

The respectable and intelligent character of the latter class of people in Philadelphia and its environs, cannot be referred to a more probable cause, than the habits of reading promoted by this institution.

The great utility and success of this measure, occasioned the formation of other libraries upon similar principles. But as it appeared more conducive to the interests of literature, to be possessed of one large, than of several smaller collections of books, coalitions gradually took place among them, till the Amicable, the Association, and the Union Companies were blended with the Library Company of Philadelphia, the title conferred by the charter.

Since this event, which took place in the year 1769, the members and the property of the company have continued to encrease; the former being now between five and six hundred in number. The number of volumes, at present, amounts to nine thousand, the selection of which, has in general been calculated to promote the more important interests of society. And the stock of books is continually encreased by occasional donations, annual importations, and purchases of every American production of merit.

Some valuable machines, an apparatus for the purposes of natural philosophy, &c. and a variety of curious artificial and natural productions also belong to the company, and are deposited in their apartments. In the catalogue heretofore published, particulars have not been inserted, but lists are in the possession of the librarian, who attends to show them on Saturday mornings, from ten to twelve o'clock. And the directors, on proper occasions, permit the instruments to be made use of.

Besides the collection, the personal property consists of some monies at interest; the sales of shares, which since August, 1793, have been fixed at fifteen pounds, and the annual payment of ten shillings from each member.

A house and lot of ground, which belonged to the Union Company; two lots of ground (one the generous donation of the late Thomas Penn,) and several ground rents constitute the real estate.

The members hold the property as tenants in common, and dispose of their shares by will or deed: but the assent of the directors, as well in such cases as in case of an original purchase, is previously necessary—a restriction early adopted, in order, as much as possible, to prevent improper persons from having access to a collection of a nature so liable to injury.

LOGANIAN LIBRARY.

Was instituted by the late James Logan, a gentleman of consummate literature, who in the course of a long life had collected a number of the most rare and curious books in almost all the ancient languages. He built a house for their reception and by deed executed in his life time, vested the house and lot, together with the books and some yearly rents for supporting a librarian, and occasionally encreasing the catalogue, in trustees for the use of the public forever, under certain rules and regulations contained in these instruments. Sometime afterwards he cancelled this deed, and prepared another, which he did not live to execute; this unfinished instrument varied the regulations in some respects, and the funds for the purpose of the institution, but the uses were the same as in the first. After his death, his children and residuary devisees, executed a deed conformable to that which had been prepared by him, vesting in the same trustees the whole estate intended by the founder, and the books were removed to a room prepared for them; arranged in neat order, and a catalogue printed.

By the constitution, William Logan (the founder's eldest son) was the first librarian, and the office was made hereditary in his family, with power to execute it by a deputy. The funds appointed for a librarian, &c. were originally small, but issued from a very improving estate; they were so reserved as to encrease at stated periods, so as to afford a very handsome income. Till one of these periods arrived they were not sufficient for the regular support of a librarian, wherefore he attended a considerable time to the duty in person. To this institution William Logan by his will, devised a very handsome library, collected partly by himself, and partly by his uncle, the late Doctor William Logan of Bristol in England, amounting to about one thousand volumes. After his death, which happened in 1776, the library was shut for several years, owing to the death or absence of the trustees. In 1791, James Logan, the last surviving trustee named in the grant, have had several previous consultations with Dr. Franklin, the latest decedent of them; and with a number of his fellow citizens, presented a memorial to the legislature, wherein he stated the then present situation of the institution, and prayed for their aid to put it into a way of answering the end of his father, the founder. Whereupon, an act was passed, whereby the Library Company of Philadelphia, their successors, &c. for the time being, together with James Logan, or his heir and two trustees, whom he or his heir shall appoint (a majority of the whole of whom shall be a quorum) shall be trustees of the said Loganian library. It is, however, provided, that the said books and other property belonging to this institution, together with such other property as may hereafter be acquired, shall be forever kept separate from the books belonging to the Library Company of Philadelphia; and that the said library shall be known by the name of the The Loganian Library, agreeably to the intention of the donor. A large and commodious room has lately been built adjoining the Philadelphia Library, for the purpose of keeping the books of the Loganian Library; and it was opened for the benefit of the citizens, in May last.

SCIENTIFIC SOCIETIES.

American Philosophical Society.

The American Philosophical Society, for promoting useful knowledge, was formed in the year 1769, by the union of two Societies, which had been instituted with similar views; viz. the advancement of useful knowledge.

One of these, stiled "The American Philosophical Society," was instituted in the year 1743, and at the time of their union consisted of 127 members: the other, stiled, "The American Society for promoting and propogating useful knowledge, held in Philadelphia;" was instituted in the year 1766, and at the time of their union consisted of 78 fellows, and 69 corresponding members.

By an act of the legislature of Pennsylvania, passed in the month of March, 1780, the society was incorporated; and the president of the executive council, (now governor of the commonwealth) made patron of the Society.

In the year 1787, M. John Hyacinth de Magellan of London, presented to the society, a donation of 200 guineas; to be by them vested in a secure and permanent fund, to the end, that the interest arising therefrom, should be annually disposed of in premiums, to be adjudged by the society, to the author of the best discovery, or most useful invention relating to navigation, astronony, or natural philosophy:—the premium to consist of an oval plate of solid standard gold, of the value of ten guineas, with suitable devices engraved thereon.

Three of these premiums, have, since the establishment of this fund, been awarded by the society, viz. one in the year 1790, and two in the year 1792.

The society have now published three volumes of their transactions. The first volume was published in the year 1771, the second in the year 1786, and the third in the year 1792.

Aided by the liberal donations of a number of friends and patrons of philosophy, both in America and Europe, and especially by the legislature of Pennsylvania, the society have been enabled to erect, on part of the state-house square, in Fifth between Chesnut and Walnut Sts. a commodious, and not inelegant building, where they now hold their stated meetings.

College of Physicians of Philadelphia.

In the year 1737, the physicians of this city associated themselves under this title, for the purpose of extending medical knowledge, and of promoting harmony and uniformity in the practice of physic.

In 1737, they obtained a charter of incorporation from the legislature.

They hold stated meetings on the first Tuesday of every month, for the purposes of their institution, and have lately published the first volume of their transactions. A foundation for a medical library is already begun, which is constantly increasing. The college consists of fellows (or resident members) and associates.

Fellows.

JOHN REDMAN, president.

William Shippen jun. vice-president.

Adam Kuhn, Thomas Parke, censors.

Samuel Powell Griffiths, secretary.

Benjamin Say, treasurer.

Samuel Duffield, Robert Harris, Benjamin Duffield, John Foulke, Andrew Ross, William Currie, Charles Moore, Casper Wistar, James Cunningham, Nathan Dorsey, Michael Leib, John H. Gibbons, Nicholas B. Waters, Benjamin S. Barton, Thomas Redman, William McIlwaine, Plunket F. Glentworth.

There was also a society formed in the year 1785, denominated, The Philadelphia Society for promoting Agriculture.

Its meetings, however, have been for some time past, suspended. But it is said, that application will be made to the legislature at their next session, for a charter, and such aid as may enable them to extend the objects of the institution. The prosperity of our country so eminently depends on agriculture, that as the subject merits, so it will certainly receive due consideration: and it is hoped the institution will soon be established on a more respectable footing than ever.

PEALE'S MUSEUM.

Of the different institutions in this city calculated to promote science, this may certainly be considered as one of the most important. To collect and preserve all the variety of animals and fossils, and exhibit these publicly, was the first general intention of erecting this museum; which is now arranged with the greatest order and judgment, agreeably to the mode prescribed by Linnaeus.

According to this system, man is placed at the head of the animal creation; and as it is by good and faithful likenesses, that different individuals are handed down to posterity with the greatest precision,—the proprietor has exerted his eminent abilities as a portrait painter, to the utmost, to gratify the public in this particular. The likenesses of the President of the United States, the Presidents of the old Congress, and of the state of Pennsylvania, with those of many others of the most eminent characters, are here presented to the great satisfaction of the admiring spectators.

The class of brutes come next in order—and the proprietor has with much labour and industry, found out a method of preserving them in such a manner, that with very little trouble, they may now be kept in a state of the highest perfection, for ages. These, as well as the birds, are placed in their most natural attitudes, and afford to the observer, a spectacle highly interesting.

Birds, the most beautiful class of animated nature, come next; of these, there are collected, a vast variety, many of which are alive, and truly curious.

Of Serpents and other Amphibious Animals, he has procured a considerable number, the smaller of which are kept in spirits, and the larger stuffed in the same manner as the brutes.

The most remarkable of the fishes, and the most beautiful and curious of the tribe of insects and worms, form a very interesting part of this extensive collection.

With respect to the fossile kingdom, considerable progress has been made in procuring various earths, minerals, and other fossile matter; which include, also, petrifications.

These were the sole objects which the museum was at first intended to comprehend: but the industry of Mr. Peale, than whom, perhaps, no man was ever more assiduous, has extended it to a variety of objects, at first not contemplated. In the productions of the vegetable kingdom, the museum is by no means deficient. Another important addition has likewise been made; of the arms, dresses, tools, utensils, &c. of the aborigines of different countries. He has also procured a variety of those articles, called Lusus Nature: but as the sight of such objects are unpleasant to some, they are only exhibited to such as are desirous of seeing them.

That an acquisition to science, so truly important, and at the same time so rapidly encreasing, should be made by the efforts of one man, remarkable for his ingenuity and perseverance, rather than for pecuniary abilities; and that under the most discouraging circumstances, he should have effected all this in the short space of ten years, is truly astonishing.

The time, however, cannot be far remote, when he must reap the fruit of his almost inconceivable labours. Indeed, when we consider his meritorious exertions, gratitude requires, that he should be rewarded.

He has paved to the American nation, an easy access to the proper subjects of the natural history of our country; an object surely of the greatest importance, and which, without his exertions, would be almost inaccessible. It ought not to be omitted, that in a manner, which reflects the highest honour upon his patriotism, he has obliged himself not to sell or dispose of his museum to foreigners, without having first obtained the consent of a number of gentlemen of science, who by his invitation, are formed into a board of visitors and inspectors; hence there is no doubt of this institution, continuing a great national magazine of information, for the benefit of the present generation and posterity.

The small sum of 25 cents, is paid for admission, towards its support and increase.

Who would not cheerfully contribute that trifle for the privilege of examining a collection, so truly valuable and interesting?

C I R C U S.

Under the head of Places of amusement, in the Register for last year, mention was made of Mr. RICKETTS, the celebrated Equestrian, whose public performances far exceeded every thing exhibited in the New World. Two useful charity benefits given to the distressed emigrants from the West Indies, and for establishing a fund to purchase fuel for the poor, during the inclemency of the weather, were circumstances that reflected honour on this gentleman's judgment, in laying the foundation of a charity so well worthy of imitation.

With regard to Mr. Rickett's abilities, it may without exaggeration be said, that he is, perhaps, the most graceful, neat, and expert public performer on horseback, that ever appeared in any part of the world; at least, the Amateurs, who have seen the best equestrians in Europe, are of this opinion.

To particularize any of the exercises at the Circus, is beyond the limits of our plan: suffice to name one or two, amongst many of the extraordinary feats executed by Mr. Ricketts: viz. His leaping over ten horses—riding with a boy on his shoulder in the attitude of a Mercury—going through the manuel exercise with a firelock—dancing a hornpipe on the saddle, the horse being in full speed, &c. &c. In short, the Circus has been esteemed amongst the first amusements met with in this truly astonishing Metropolis; as a place to dispel the gloom of the thoughtful, exercise the lively activity of the young and gay, or to relax the minds of the sedentary or industrious trader.
